MED13 FOUNDATION · Fly a family to the table

If you have airline miles, hotel points, or a small budget for charitable giving, you can fly one ultra-rare disease family to a research convening where families partner with scientists to shape the next decade of drug discovery. Here are the easiest ways.

What you're flying them to. In 2027, three rare disease patient foundations are convening 75 to 100 families with researchers in the Chicago area for the first-ever Pan-Mediator Family Convening. Over one weekend, families will donate biosamples for drug discovery, meet the scientists working on cures for their children, and co-author the research roadmap that will guide treatment development for the next decade. This is an important milestone in starting the drug discovery and preclinical work with families as informed research partners and community members. Most of these families have spent years navigating diagnostic odysseys and complex medical needs. Families are flying from across the US and from the UK, Italy, Saudi Arabia, and beyond. Travel costs run roughly $2,000 for a single domestic family member up to $5,000–$10,000 or more for an international family of four. We need to seat 75 to 100 families. The gap is travel.

The three easiest ways to help

✈ AIRLINE MILES

Transfer miles to one of the foundation's airline accounts listed below.

We book all family flights centrally so logistics stay clean.

25,000 miles ≈ one domestic round-trip seat. 50,000 miles ≈ one international leg.

● HOTEL POINTS

Transfer points to one of the foundation's hotel accounts listed below. Bonvoy and Honors transfers between members are free.

We hold the venue room block and assign rooms to families.

Three room nights ≈ a family of four for the weekend.
